The flour sale could be the first really explosive round fired in the agricultural trade war which has been looming between the EEC and the United States. What you're looking at is no Sea of Tranquillity.

Neither is it a scene from the imagination of some science-fiction artist (although we commissioned one of Britain's finest sci-fi artists to paint it).

It is what you would actually see if the waters of the North Sea suddenly became invisible.

Silhouetted against a huge moon are the four giant production platforms that form the core of the Brent oilfield.

The Brent Field, operated by Shell, lies far out to sea, roughly halfway between Scotland and Norway, and about 100 miles northeast of Shetland.

They are built to withstand onehundred foot waves and winds gusting up to 160 mph while continuing to collect oil and gas, 24 hours a day, from rock depths lying some two miles beneath the sea-floor.

Floating in the far distance (bottom right) is the drilling rig Stadrill, prospecting for oil in another part of the Brent Field.

And riding the invisible seas with contemptuous ease (top right) is the 23,000 ton semi-submersible, pipe-laying barge Semac I.

FLAGS: a major new gas-gathering scheme in the North Sea.

We used Semac I to lay one of the world's longest, largest, deepest undersea pipelines. (The painting shows the pipe being fed over the stern of the barge and trailing down to the seabed.)

The pipeline is the backbone of a major new North Sea gas-gathering scheme known to the oil industry as FLAGS: Far North Liquids & Associated Gas System.

It will enable us to bring ashore the substantial and hitherto untapped gas reserves of Brent and other oilfields in the northern North Sea.

The FLAGS pipeline, 36" across and made of steel coated with concrete, runs 280 miles along the seabed between the Brent Field and St. Fergus in Scotland.

Laying it was an astonishing feat.

The North Sea is no millpond. It is quite the most hostile stretch of water the oil and gas industry has ever tackled.

Much of the pipeline was laid in appalling weather: force 10 gales, thick fog rolling in the troughs between giant waves, zero visibility:

The FLAGS system will before long be supplying some 12% of Britain's gas needs. (The Brent Field already supplies about an eighth of Britain's oil.)

But neither statistics nor adjectives (nor the vastness of our operating costs) can ever give you a real sense of the scale and scope of our work in the North Sea.

The Brent Field: an offshore oiltown.

The Brent Field, for instance, does not simply consist of the four great platforms attended by a pipe-laying barge and a drilling rig or two.

Several other giant structures(like the floating oil-storage and-loading facility; Spar) are nearby. And platforms may be attended by 'flotels' (floating hotels) and semi-submersible diving barges.

Tugs, tankers and supply boats ply the surface, the latter bringing in everything from drill-pipe, cement for well-casing and drilling mud, to food and fuel.

Under the surface, mini-subs and diving-bells are at work. While in the skies, helicopters constantly come and go, bringing in vital tools and flying drilling crews and other technicians in and out

Our platforms and rigs are crewed by over 3,000 men, who manage to tuck away well over 100 tons of food each week.

Power to keep the big platforms working is generated by turbines similar to those which fly large jet aircraft.

Computer banks continuously receive and process information about subsea oilwells and the many working functions of each platform, key data being relayed simultaneously to the platforms and Shell headquarters in Aberdeen.

The cost of these operations is so immense that it beggars description.

One way of putting it is that Shell's expenditure in the North Sea has amounted to more than half a million pounds per day, every day for the last eighteen years.

When we add up our chequebook stubs, our total investment to date works out at more than £4,000 million in 1981 money. Those figures double when you include the sums invested by us on behalf of our partners.

A conquest to rival the moon-landings.

Although there are projects which cost more, in terms of sheer technological innovation there is no other achievement on earth to match the conquest of the North Sea.

We have pushed back the limits of technology so far that the only feat which invites comparison is otherworldly the placing of the first men on the moon by NASA's Apollo space programme.

As a matter of fact, the computerroom that monitors our operations has a great deal in common with that famous control-room in Houston.

And Shell is proud to be in the forefront of an endeavour which only twenty years ago, would have been dismissed as pure science-fiction.

Why the IPA has asked ACAS to arbitrate in its dispute with Equity about Channel Four and TV-am.

How actors are paid on ITVI

Actors who appear in television commercials get paid first of all a 'studio' fee in return for their time and their skills when a commercial is being 'shot.' This fee is freely negotiated subject to a minimum.

Then, after the commercial has been screened, they are paid additional 'repeat' fees dependent upon two factors: the number of times a commercial is repeated and the size of the potential audience of the ITVI station on which it appears (eg. repeat fees for London are much more than those for Anglia or Border). These factors are applied to the negotiated 'studio' fee.

The basic Agreement setting these guidelines for ITVI was originally drawn up in 1955 by the Institute of Practitioners in Advertising, representing advertisers and agencies, and Equity, representing actors and actresses. It was: last updated in 1981. This Agreement is not in dispute.

What the dispute is really about

The dispute is not with performers but with their union Equity. Nor is it about 'studio' fees for the new services which for TV-am and Channel Four can be the same as for ITVL It is over what 'repeat' fees are fair to artistes and advertisers for the two new channels.

The average advertisement on Channel Four is seen in about 500,000 homes and it is expected that on TV-am it will on average be seen by rather fewer. By contrast, on ITVI an average 'spot' is seen in 4 million homes.

The Equity argument is that for these two smaller channels artistes should receive the same repeat fees as for an ITVI audience of four times the size.

This is why advertisers, who are under severe cost pressures on so many fronts, recognise the justice of the IPA case. There are consequently few commercials on Channel Four.

What are the consequences of the dispute?

Both TV-am and Channel Four are threatened by the loss in advertising revenue. Equity members are themselves losing opportunities for substantial additional earnings from commercials. Few of those commercials appearing on Channel Four do so on the basis demanded by Equity.

Since March 1982 the IPA has tried extensively in direct negotiation with Equity to explain these facts.

The IPA has made many conciliatory and generous interim offers to Equity because it wishes both Channel Four and TV-am to succeed. All of these offers have been rejected.

How to solve the dispute

The IPA does not now believe it can be solved by direct negotiation.

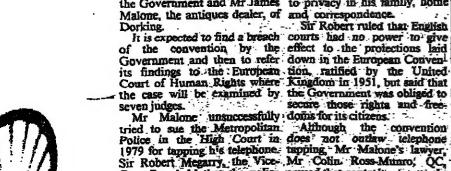

We believe the only chance of a fast and fair solution to this problem is to ask ACAS to examine the case and undertake arbitration binding on both sides.

The IPA is willing to be bound by an ACAS decision as to both the most appropriate method of paying TV performers and the scale of payment on Channel Four and TV-am. Will Equity do the same?

Was it his intention to maintain his publicly stated stance of leaving the exchange rate to be determined by the market, or did he intend to respond to the next flood by pushing up interest rates yet again?

Since there was no reason to believe that Britain's productivity was rising or would rise faster than that of its competitors, what was his policy for restoring the still substantial loss in Britain's international competitiveness? Was it the barren, cruel and strife-ridden course of attempting to enforce not pay moderation, but continuing real cuts in wages, salaries and standard of living of his fellow countrymen? In the light of experience, it was a gross error to abolish all controls on the movement of capital and domestic savings out of Britain. The exodus of capital had been running at the rate of £10,000m a year since 1980. Was the Chancellor not ashamed (he said) that the total capital investment in the manufac-turing industry of his own country is now smaller than the flow of British money overseas?

We believe (he said) that the central objective of economic policy is to create wealth and expand

These objectives could only be achieved by policies for expanding demand and for achieving competitiveness, together with far-reaching measures at company and industrial level to restore the shattered supply side of the British economy. Labour not only believed that the

Britain's relatively poor industrial performance was that this nation was not nearly well enough educated, Lord Glenamara (Lab), a former Secretary of State for Education, said in opening for the Opposition a debate on educational oppotunities upder the present Government.

A country which was self-suf-ficient in oil, he said, had coal supplies for a thousand years and could go to war at the drop of a hat could no longer claim that every child would be given the chance to develop its talents to the full. Just as the Government was destroying manufacturing industry so it was undermining and eroding Britain's education system which could and should be contributing so much to industrial recovery of the right kind. Since 1979 the objective of the 1944 Education Act had clearly been abandoned and that of the Robbins report was about to be There were 3,222 university teachers on the dole and the result

Lady Young, Lord Privy Seal and Leader of the House, said the keynote of the Government's education policy was the good management of scarce resouces. At a time when demographic factors were forcing changes on educational were forcing changes on educational spending per pupil in the schools. Fowler to give guidance on NHS charges By Anthony Bevins Political Correspondent

Mr Norman Fowler, the Secretary of State for Social Services, is preparing a circular to health authorities, outlining new guidance on the privatization of selected services within the National Health Service.

The circular, to be issued by next month, will make clear the full extent of the government commitment to privatization.

Ministers have stated that where hospital catering and cleaning can be carried out more economically by the private sector, then contracts should be put out to tender. The remaining issue, to be made clear by the circular, is whether they have extended the privatization principle to include the subcontraction of health care in cases where the private sector has surplus facilities for a particular treat-ment, for which the NHS cannot satisfy demand. Mr Fowler is also set to make an announcement increasing

Who's the boss, you or your phone system?

The time you spend on your office phone is your business. The time you spend just trying to get through is ours. That's where you're at the mercy of your office telephone system.

Think of the man-hours you and your staff burn up just waiting for a line, re-dialling engaged numbers, or running to that constantly ringing phone.

British Telecom's Merlin* business phone systems change the odds in your favour. Unlike older phone systems these incorporate a small but cleverly programmed computer that sits quietly in the corner of the office and does the leg work for you.

You no longer have to wait in line for a line. You dial direct. The operator is free to concentrate on improving your company image with the customers who ring in. If you find a number is engaged you can tell your phone to try it again without constantly re-dialling every digit. It will even remember those long continental numbers you have to dial with monotonous regularity.

What's more, our new systems won't take no for an answer. If you're not at your desk you can set your calls to ring another extension, or ring round a preselected group. It all depends on the instructions you tap in.

With British Telecom's Merlin business phone systems your company comes out on top - in efficiency, morale and even economy. Find out more by filling in the coupon.

US to hold manoeuvres in Honduras next month

From Our Correspondent Washington

The United States and Honduras will hold a large-scale ioint military exercise in Honduras next month designed to improve the Central American country's defences, the Pentagon announced yesterday.

The six-day manoeuvres, in which about 1.600 American and 4.000 Honduran troops will take part will begin on February I in a sensitive area of castern Honduras, near the border with Nicaragua.

The troops are under strict orders to stay at least 10 miles from the border area. No US ground combat troops will be directly involved. About 900 US support personnel will be on Honduran soil.

The Reagan Administration has denied Nicaraguan charges that the US is supporting covert military operations against regime. Nicaragua which Washington Code has alleged is a subversive threat to Honduras.

The US Government has also accused the Sandinist regime of Nicaragua, which is backed by Cuba and the Soviet Union, of aiding the left-wing guerrillas in

The Polish economic crisis

Nuggets of success amid deep gloom

Like prospectors panning for gold, Polish ministers have proudly presented small nuggets of success in an otherwise bleak economic terrain.

Coal production in 1982 once the measuring stick of the economy - has increased by almost 26 million tonnes to reach 190 million tonnes, and coal exports to the West have almost doubled. Sugar production from the 1982 beet crop is heading for a record, raising hopes that some can be exported and Poland has just recorded its first trade surplus - $400m (about £250m) - for many years.

That is the end of the good news. The rest of the story has grim terms by Mr Stanislaw Nieckarz, the Finance Minister, Mr Zdzislaw Krasinski, Prices Minister, and Tadeusz Nestorowicz.

The tone of these ministerial utterances is to lower the expectations of the Polish people, to damp down any hopes of wage increases or Solidarity-type concessions.

Some prices will go up in the first half of the year, but food prices will stay stable at least until the summer. Rationing of food and other goods will remain to stop panic buying. Apart from debts and imports from the West, Poland's main concerns remain those of supplying enough food for the population, controlling inflation (that is too many zloties chasing too few goods) and the related problem of labour productivity (workers are not increasing production suffi-ciently because money has lost its value as an incentive). These factors must have

> An overall decline of 2 per cent in 1982 compared with 1981 in industrial production, despite some improvement in the autumn. Production is suff 16 per cent below 1979 levels.

Incomes increased last year by 62 per cent, largely to compensate for radical price increases. This increase was not matched by an increase in goods on the shelves. Hence the drastic drop in the spending power of the zloty.

 Sales of potatoes, an important staple to the state, fell in 1982 by 96.8 per cent to 2.3 million tonnes. Fodder production also fell.

The number of those em ployed in the state sector of the economy fell last year by 378,000.

 Labour productivity was up 4 per cent on 1981; but 10 per cent down on 1979.

Direct rule starts in Namibia

From Michael Hornsby Johannesburg

The vast, mineral-rich territory of Namibia, which South Africa seized from Germany in 1915, found itself back under direct rule from Pretoria yesterday after more than five years of semi-autonomous government.

Mr Danie Hough, South Africa's Administrator-General in the territory, dissolved the 72-member National Assembly as from midnight on Tuesday after Mr Dirk Mudge and his Democratic Turnhalle Alliance (DTA), a coalition of 11 different ethnic groups, had resigned as the interim govern-

The DTA - South Africa's own creation - won an overwhelming victory in elections held under Pretoria's supervision in 1978. These elections were boycotted, however, by Swapo (the South-West Africa People's Organization) which has been waging a guerrilla war for Namibia's full independence for a decade and a half.

Mr Hough also announced that on Friday Mr J F Greebe, at present the Provincial Secretary of Natal, will take over as burgh. A father's long quest in the wilds of Kashmir

From Trevor Fishlock Delhi

Kenneth MacDonald left India yesterday at the end of another chapter in his extraordi-nary quest. It was the sixth time he had visited the wild mountains and valleys of Kashmir in search of his daughter, who was last seen eighteen months ago.

"My hope that she is still alive remains strong," he said, before leaving for home in Scotland. "There is no evidence that she is dead. She may have been taken by force and is unable to communicate with us. shall return, for somewhere in Kashmir is the key to all this and I shall go on until I find it."

Mr MacDonald's story is one of faith. "We are a deeply religious family and believe that nothing happens by chance. Our hope is an extension of our

His daughter, Alison, a history student at Aberdeen University, was nineteen when she was last seen on August 17, 1981. She was on holiday with a student friend, Elizabeth Merry. They booked into the Glacier Hotel, in Sonamarg, a small town fifty miles from Kashmir's

On August Miss Merry went

her trek on August 20, found her friend gone and raised the alarm. The Governor of Kashmir ordered a search of the rugged countryside and Mr MacDonald flew out to take part in it. He later offered a reward of £6,000 for information, very large by Indian standards.

In his subsequent visits he has painstakingly put together a jigsaw of his daughter's visit to Kashmir, interviewing everyone who saw her and spoke to her. He has stayed in the same hotel room at Sonamarg and has been to Pakistan in the belief that she might have crossed the border. On his recent two-week trip he stayed in the same houseboat the girls occupied in Srinagar before they set off for Sonamarg.

ANC refugees seek Mozambique shelter

From Our Own Correspondent, Johannesburg

the underground African National Congress who until recently were living as refugees in Lesotho and Swaziland are reported to have moved to Mozambique, apparently tar-gets for South African assassination squads.

According to informed sources in Maseru, the Lesotho capital, where 30 ANC members and 12 Lesotho civilians were killed in a South African commando raid on December 9 about 100 refugees were flown out to Maputo, the Mozambique capital, in six flights of the veekend before last. There are some 11,000 South African refugees in Lesotho, a small mountainous kingdom surrounded by South Africa. Their numbers were greatly swelled after the Soweto riots of 1976-77 which eventually spread throughout South Africa. Probably only a small number of them are active ANC members.

More than 100 members of Lesotho has been noticeably untroubled by the attentions of the Lesotho Liberation Army, the guerrilla wing of the exiled Basutoland Congress Party whose leader, Mr Ntsu Mokhemlee, is a bitter political enemy of Chief Leabua Jonathan, the Lesotho Prime Minister.

When film-making was all about circus and scandal

Leonid Trauberg, who has just been in London for the Queen Elizabeth Hall performances of his silent film New Babylon with the original orchestral score by Shostakovich, is one of the last survivors of the heroic age of the Soviet cinema. He ranks, indeed, as one of the earliest of the Soviet masters. Kozintsev and Trauberg's first feature. The Adventures of Oktyabrina, came out neck and neck with Eisenstein's Strike, and years before the feature debuts of Pudovkin and Dovzhenko.

It was a time for precocity. When they first met in 1920 Trauberg was 18 and Grigori Kozintsev barely 16. By the beginning of 1922 they had joined up with two other youngsters. Georgii Krizhitski and Sergei Yutke-vitch (born 1904), to establish their own theatre. Every young artist was armed with his own "ism". Trauberg and his friends issued a manifesto proclaiming the new gospel of "Eccentricism". They called their studio theatre "The Factory of the Eccentric Actor" or, in the abbreviatory mode of the period, "FEKS".

FEKS pronounced the decease of the old bourgeois academic theatre, and defined a new kind of theatre which would combine circus, sport, movies. music hall, puppers and scandals. Their idols were Pearl White, Lon Chaney, Harry Piel and the American silent film comics above all Chaplin and Keaton.

After a number of rumbustiously inventive productions the FEKS group decided that the movies were ready for them. In that brief, enchanted period of the early Twenties, the film studios were open to anyone with ideas and cheek; and the ideals of FEKS were first brought to the screen in 1924, with The

the film, showing bizarrely clad and made-up personages performing haz-ardous feats on the wings of aeroplanes or the parapets of skyscrapers, strongly suggest the influence of Mack Sennett. The five films that followed over the next three years included a stylish expressionist version of Gogol's The Overcoat and a costume melodrama about the Decembrists, S. I. D. It was the considerable commercial success of this film which gave them the opportunity to make New Babylon. The idea for a film about the Paris Commune was suggested by P. Blyakhin, who had written the first successful Soviet feature film. Little Red Devils, and by this time occupied an official position in the cultural establishment Kozintsev and Trauberg were at first dubious about the possibility of re-creating the Paris of 1871 in Leningrad, though in the outcome it is as successful an evocation of a time and place as the cinema can boast. They studied Marx's vivid accounts of the Commune; but the masterstroke of using a great department store, the "New Babylon" of the title, as a microcosm of Paris was most likely inspired by Zola's Au Bonheur des dames.

By the time New Babylon was released, in March 1929, the silent film was extinct almost everywhere in the world but the Soviet Union, where the change-over was delayed because of the practical difficulties of re-equipping vast numbers of rural cinemas. Kozintsev and Trauberg were very conscious, however, of the inad-equacy of the usual musical accompaniments provided for silent films - awful hit-and-miss pot-pourries cobbled together by pianists or orchestra directors in individual suitable composer, they were advised that a newcomer called Shostakovich had written an opera, The Nose, which might well be peculiar enough to appeal to them.

He came to see us - a little man, very neat but with unruly hair". Trauberg recalls. "At that time he affected a Gogolesque manner of speech - very clipped and formal -phrases like 'Honoured - most delighted...' We were rather worried, because he seemed so young. We asked him if he knew anything about music for films, and he said that he had played the piano at the Ribbon of Light cinema in Leningrad for three years. That was reassuring. We showed him the film. He sat quite silent through it, and at the end stood up with 'Honoured - most delighted. When do you need it?'

"Rather embarrassed, we said that we needed it in three weeks. 'If you help me', said Shostakovich, 'I'll do it quicker than that.' Within three weeks he brought us the score - 90 minutes of delight. 'It is very good', we told him. 'Yes', he said, 'I thought so too." It was the start of a lifelong collaboration between the film-makers and the composer. It was to be 53 vears, however, before Trauberg saw the film with the score performed correctly: the others never saw it. The Russian cinema orchestras of 1929 could never get it right. The images and the music never came together, so that Shostakovich's marvellous counterpoints, and ironies like the montage of the 'Can-can' and

In 1929 Kozintsev and Trauberg received little thanks for giving the cinema one of its masterworks. The reception of the film was disastrous. There is an often-repeated story that Shostakovich's music was met with such incomprehension that audiences hooted and complained that the conductor must be drunk. Trauberg says this is a misunderstanding. was the film they hated. They couldn't understand our montages. The audiences stamped their feet, and accused the projectionist of being drunk. They always blamed the projectionists: they'd say 'Come down out of that box - you're no projec-tionist, you're a cobbler'.

"But it was terrible. The film opened in two cinemas on the Nevsky Prospect. Kozintsev and I went to the first performance at the Piccadilly and the actors Kuzmina and Gerassimov went to the Giant Cinema. You can't imagine how terrible it was. I couldn't bear it. I came out of the cinema and went across the Prospect to the Anichkov Park. I just clung to the railings and cried. And at that moment Kuzmina and Gerassimov came from the Giant. They looked at me, and simply said 'So it was the same at the Piccadilly'.

"The reviews were as bad. In the studio there was a very hostile discussion. At the end a small man - a, carpenter - stood up and said: 'Comrades, this film is not all bad.

soldier is digging a grave. The only pity is that we can't put Kozintsev and Trauberg in that grave. But we survived. Kozintsev and I and Eisenstein suffered terrible criticism but we learnt to take it. We weren't like Griffith, who was too sensitive to criticism." In fact the Kozintsev Trauberg partnership survived for 20 years and was responsible for some of the finest Soviet sound films. Afterwards, and following a hiatus in the hard years of the late Forties and early Fifties, they worked indepen-dently. Kozintsev's last films were the magnificent Hamlet and King Lear-still with music by Shostakovich. When he died, 10 years ago, Kozintsev still seemed a young man, and the whole FEKS group seem to have some secret of rejuvenation. At 82 Trauberg remains intensely vital, annoyed rather than handicapped by failing sight and hearing. He has just published a book on his beloved old silent screen comedians, and is working on one on operatts. At home in Moscow he speaks every day to the other enfant terrible of the first FEKS days, Sergei Yutkevitch, who recently embarked for the first time on directing opera.

In London Trauberg was voracious for new impressions. He had admired

Gandhi though he was critical of its lack of structure. He loved E.T.: "Spiciberg is a great director - to be able to take a kids' tale and make something profound and universal. I shall do all I can to persuade them to buy it for the Soviet Union." Cats had touched him most: "If I could I would have seen it again. It was really moving to discover a link through 60 years, to find people attempting the same things that we wanted to do, so

The Dream of Gerontius may be the great document of hypocrisy in music, but the case is more interesting and complex than that Elgar here uses hypocrisy to test the same canker in his audience, to find out just how much pious wishful thinking it will accept as divine revelation. He makes his task more difficult by asking an English audience to accept the whole high Catholic mystery of dying, but then, if it works, his success will be all the more demonstrable. And work it does. Only a saint could hear Gerontius and not be mightly awed.

This time the majesty was in the big choral set-pieces and the intensity in much of the orchestral playing under an impassioned, possessed Bernard Hairink. The prelude was very nearly pitch-black, with solitary lines to be made out as elements of a stage set, perhaps for the third act of Tristan. To present successfully what is essentially music of domestic and private pleasure in the Barbican's wide, anonymous arena is a testing enough exercise the struggle to reconcile polarized genres and environment was exacerbated on Tuesday by under-projected performances, and a new Barbican noise, a fitful vibrating, as of a distant pneumatic drill or exhausted steam train.

In the spaces of relative silence in between its intrusive activity the men of the BBC Singers, conducted by John Poole, gave a fresh-voiced performance of two of Schubert's unaccompanied malevoice quartets: "Lied im sunlight, water and flame flickering lightly through its short stanzas, and "Grab und Mond", its cold, numb har-

Besides his remarkable technique, the most impressive feature of Ton Koopman's harpsichord recital was the bewildering variety in it, not only in his choice of music but in his infinitely flexible phrasing and articulation. Hogg, the "Ettrick shepherd"; was a major figure in the Scottish Romantic movement which sought to transform the raw material of folk tradition into something literary and "respectable". He was perhaps closer than any to the authentic oral sources (he was illiterate into his late teens) and least inclined to bowdlerize and falsify. In fact, as Douglas Mack makes clear, he suffered significantly at the bands of his editors, and his surviving original texts are invariably racier and less conventional than the published versions.

There is nothing in this volume to match the oppressive power of Hogg's masterpiece. The Private Memoirs and Confessions of a Justified Sinner, though a piece titled Strange Letter of a Lunatic has some interesting parallels with the novel. In which guise I have been reading, with the amateur's true pleasure, the Folies Bergère history written by a very professional con-noisseur of chorus girls, Charles Castle, who has also (the two things are not perhaps so unrelated) made a TV docu-mentary called The Barbara Woodhouse World of Animals. The Folies Bergère was the firs music hall in the world to put a naked woman on the stage. The Folies was not, however, the venue for the first nude ascent of a thirty foot ladder, a distinction Mr Castle, serious about such data, attributes to the rival establishment, the Casino de Paris, in 1917. The Folies has never been particu-larly filthy, Nor indeed, perhaps surprisingly, especially French. Its long tradition, which evidently still continues, of recruiting its nudes from the English lower-middle classes, long-lim-bed girls from Lytham St Anne's and Tooting Bec, gives its chorus line its aura of suburban English primness, its Betjeman quality: an odd and Words are stronger than deeds: rhetoric always outlives reality. The United States is a classic example. There is a President who evokes the homespun image of the cowboy and the pioneer (neither of which he ever was, except on celluloid). But he presides over a society where the last frontier shut down a long time ago. At least, the last frontier in the old sense.

Early next month Robert Maxwell's Pergamon Press publishes an anthology of the speeches and writings of Yuri Andropov in its Leaders of the World series. The speed with which this follows Andropov's promotion to leadership status attests Maxwellian foresight in persuading Andropov to agree to the project 18 months ago. BPCC's chairman has already profited on a smaller scale from the same hunch. At his firm's annual Christmas lunch with the BBC, for whom they print Radio Times, it is the custom for participants to bet on the year's coming events. Maxwell's Christmas 1981 wager was that by Christmas 1982 Brezhnev would be dead and Andropov would have succeeded him. At the recent reunion he collected all round. Maxwell met Brezhnev on several occasions, but his dealings with Andropov have all been by correspondence.

The challenge facing the Alliance now

Time to unveil the new mould

by David Marquand

Today sees the first of a series of Alliance rallies designed to set out the themes on which its two parties will campaign in the run-up to the general election. We shall do ourselves great damage if we become preoccupied solely with the econ-omy. The Alliance was born of a revolt against Britain's political system; it is in our critique of that system that our real significance lies.

The politico-economic crisis with which successive British governwhich successive British governments have grappled unavailingly for a decade and a half has given rise to three broad schools of thought. In the middle of the ideological spectrum – on the "wet" left of the Conservative Party and the old, Callaghan-Healey right of the Labour Party – are the true, small "c" conservatives. For these, the "c" conservatives. For these, the managed capitalism which we have known since the war is still in working order, and so is the traditional "Westminster model" of parliamentary government. Britain's problems are to be overcome, not by rash new departures from the conventional wisdom of the recent past, but by soldiering on in the old familiar way, along the old, familiar

On the two extremes of the spectrum - among the Conservative "dries" and the Labour left - are what might be called the economic radicals. Here, Conservatives and Labour differ greatly, but the differences are less striking than the similarities. Both recognize that the crisis is real, and acknowledge that it can be overcome only by far-reaching changes. Both see it, however, as an economic crisis, not a political

one. Both are wedded to the existing political system, and both hope to use the enormous panoply of power government in possession of a temporary majority in the Commons to force radical and irreversible changes on the economy.

The third school, to which the Alliance belongs and of which it is the vehicle, contains the political radicals. Like the conservatives, these believe that it is premature to mourn the death of Keynesian economics. Like the economic radicals, however, they also believe that Britain is in a state of crisis, from which the old ways offer no escape. Unlike both, they see it as a political crisis, to be overcome by

Not luxuries but essentials for recovery and peace

For them proportional representation, parliamentary reform, decentralization of government and a bill of rights — indeed, all the interconnected political and constitutional reforms without which Britain cannot adapt herself to the economic and social changes since the "Westminster model" took its modern form nearly 100 years ago are not luxuries, to be postponed until the more pressing bread-and-butter questions of jobs, prices and social welfare have been answered. They are necessary conditions of economic recovery and social peace. Few ordinary voters consciously so unconsciously. The British people know they have been badly governed for the last quarter of a century. They also know that the fault lies less in the particular policies of particular governments than in the system: in the weary defeatism of the Whitehall mandarinate, in the narrow sectionalism of the organized producer groups on both sides of industry, in the introversion and unrepresentative-ness of the two big parties.

That is why they gave the Alliance such an enthusiastic welcome in the tumultuous eight months between the launch of the SDP and the Crosby by-election, when it seemed to promise a change of system rather than mere changes of policy. If we are to rekindle that enthusiasm, we must give the promise which evoked it as high a priority as we did when

Slogans about "breaking the mould" are not enough. Still less is reliance on the piecemeal adhockery which the British Establishment confuses with common sense. Since the mid-1960s, this country has suffered a long series of ad hoc constitutional changes and attempted changes - an abortive plan for House of Lords reform, two abortive plans for devolution in Scotland and Wales; three different schemes of parliamentary reform; sweeping changes in the structure of local government and the boundaries of local authorities; the introduction of the popular referendum. They sprang from no coherent principle and embodied no public consensus. Partly because of that, they failed, almost without belong to this third school. Most do exception, to achieve the objectives for which their authors had hoped. If we have learned anything from the last 20 years, we should have learned that the constitution is a whole, made up of interrelated parts; that it is fatal to make changes in one part without thinking through the consequences for the others; and that the deepening constitutional malaise which lies at the root of this country's political and economic ills can be cured only by a comprehen sive settlement, based on coherent and explicit principles.

Pointing the way to the Alliance's place in history

The means are to hand. Soon after it was formed, the Alliance set up two joint SDP-Liberal com-missions, one on economic recovery and one on constitutional reform.

The first did the groundwork for the Alliance's economic strategy. If it has the courage and imagination, the second can yet delineate the outlines of the new constitutional settlement which ought to be an Alliance government's chief claim to a place in British history. If it does so, we have a chance, not merely to break the mould, but to replace it. If it sinks back into the soggy pragmatism which has charac-terized the old parties' approach to constitutional change, we risk betraying the hopes of which we are the only credible repository.

Richard North looks at the Whitehall anomaly in land improvements

Digging out the farmers' two-way cash crop

Farmer Tom Richards would like to combine conservation, tradition and profit, and believes he can. His Weish farm has lovely soggy field, Gwaun Goch (red meadow), abundant in streams, flowers, birds and butterflies.

The Nature Conservancy Council, which is funded by the Department of the Environment, pays him small sums to forgo some of the extra profit that would result from draining the field. He regards the arrangement as fair. If he wished, though, he could benefit greatly from a structure of subsidies for land improvement and EEC-supported prices for extra produce already in massive surplus.

In this crazy system, two government ministries pursue opposing objectives: the Ministry of Agriculture spends a fortune tempting farmers to wreck the countryside in the cause of greater productivity: Environment now proposes to spend even more money than at present in bribing the farmers to resist these blandishments.

The problem is the result of a long misreading of farming practices. For too long farmers have persuaded the public that Britain must produce more and more milk and meat. while the conservation movement has been slow in showing what a dangerous and expensive character modern farming has become.

Critics ranging from Richard Body, Conservative MP and author of the recently published Agriculture: the Triumph and the Shame, to Marian Shoard, with her Theft of the Countryside, have castigated the maze of grants and subsidies which bolster farmers' incomes. Farmers, uniquely among British businessmen, are not hampered by serious planning controls as they change the face of the landscape.

Several independent reports are due to be published this spring which will urge toughter regulations in the countryside. Left to themselves, many farmers would continue to farm as their predecessors did. But the Ministry of Agriculture, in spite of a statutory obligation to take account of conservation, tempts them with grants to drain or plough land in order to increase production (it also increases their dependence on fertilizer, pesticides, bought-in seed. diesel fuel and machinery, much of it also subsidized).

Cynics in the Ministry admit that we do no need such extra production but insist that every pint of milk and bag of grain helps Britain gain EEC funds. Until recently, the Ministry often steamrollered through its policy against Department of Enrironment opposition.

The Treasury has called on the Ministry of Agriculture to revise the cost benefit analysis on which it assesses grant-aid, since it is suspected of being crucially weighted in favour of improvement," whatever the cost to taxpayers or the environment; Treasury pressure is also believed to have gone a long way toward insisting that the Ministry consults the Doe before grant-aid is given to farmers in sensitive areas. The first major fruit is believed to be the compromise over Halvergate Marsh, in Norfolk's Broadland, where grantaid on some proposed drainage schemes has been withheld. But two bodies, the Council for the Protection of Rural England and the Council for National Parks (CPRE AND CNP), are alleging skulduggery by the DoE. It apparently hoped to keep as a "departmental matter" (that is to say, not scrutinized by Parliament) the proposed financial guidelines for compensating farmers whose freedom to take grant-aid to change their farming practices is restricted by conservation requirements.

The CPRE and CNP have drawn attention to conflicting ministerial statements during the closing stages of the Wildlife and Countryside Act's passage through Parliament which led MPs and peers to expect a degree of control over what the guidelines were to be.

"It is proposed that farmers be compensated for the profit they would have made", says John Bowers, an economist at Leeds University. "But typically between 50 and 80 per cent of that profit would have been subsidy, and sometimes more". No comparable principle of compensation exists

"It does seem peculiar", says Richard Body. "After all, a farmer buys a farm knowing that it has, say, wetland on it, and gets it on the cheap because of its lower productivity. It appears rather naughty to expect to be paid handsomely for forgoing subsidy from the taxpayer to improve the value of the land."

The sums involved are large. In one deal, in Kent, a farmer is said to have negotiated compensation of £100,000 a year. In another case, Watten Farm on Exmoor's National Park, compensation alone - more than 10 per cent of capital - would have justified purchase by an incoming farmer. Appalled, the National Park bought the farm itself.

The CPRE and CNP have engaged the interest of the chairman of the Commons Select Committee on the Environment, Reg Freeson, to bring the issue under public scrutiny. The Government will be faced with an embarrassing choice: to restrict taxpayers' expenditure on spoiling the countryside and admit the need for regulation; or to pay dearly for conservation, even when it is government expenditure which most threatens it.

And he appealed over the heads of the politicians to the Mr Gromyko is a practiced German public's self-interest in not etting itself be influenced by Washington into taking steps - ie deployment - that would damage the relations with Eastern Europe painstakingly built up in the past decade.

He did not succeed in undermining Chancellor Kohl's firm support for Nato's deployment policy, Nor did he convince the press and public opinion that the Russians bore no responsibility for the breakdown of detente and the deadlock in Geneva. But he did achieve three import-

the British and French missiles into the foreground of public discussion: Germans quietly to lobby the Americans to moderate the zero option as the only acceptable formula at Geneva; and he ensured that the missiles issue, despite the reluctance of the three main parties, became a central issue in the election campaign, by highlighting the growing differences between the parties - the Christian Democrats standing pat on deployment, the Free Democrats hankering for an interim solution if necessary, and the Social Democrats veering towards outright opposition to any ant aims; he brought the question of

Mr Gromyko could afford to take a moderate, above-party-politics approach because, like the Americans, the Russians are waiting to see the outcome of the Bonn election. If Dr Kohl wins, they need not think they have lost the game. If the Chancellor is suspected of having given Washington a blank cheque for new missiles, regardless of the Geneva results and the behaviour of the European allies, the anti-American mood in West Germany will grow. Dr Kohl and the missile plans will run into difficulties that could lead a Christian Democratic government into examining an interim solution more positively. And, of course, if the Social Democrats win, they will press the Americans very hard for a compromise in Geneva. Why did Mr Gromyko come here to talk about all this when his country is negotiating with the Americans, and with them alone? He did so because, willy-nilly, the Federal Republic has been dragged into the middle of the East-West

Without deployment in Germany, the Nato twin-track strategy collapses. Only the West Germans can therefore put any real leverage on the Americans from within the Western camp. And conversely it is only on the West Germans that the influence, pulling on the strings of relations with East Germany, trade, detente and heightened West Ger-man anxieties about the East-West

In spite of anger in the conserva-tive press that Mr Gromyko seemed to achieve more in his visit than his hosts, those he dealt with came away optimistic that agreement can in the end be found. For once, they do not believe they have been outfoxed.

Viva Victorian

If the world and its press had not been riveted on what Mrs Thatcher had to say about the date of the general election (and in the event she said little more than wait and see) it would have paid more attention to that part of her long television interview with Mr Brian Walden last Sunday in which she fully accepted that her vision for the future involved a wish to restore Victorian values. Even so, what she said was enough to amaze some of the bourgeoisie.

Mrs Thatcher had described her vision of the future Britain in which people were more independent of the state. When Mr Walden suggested that this vision implied a restoration of Victorian values, Mrs Thatcher embraced the idea with

The Victorian age in which these values prevailed was, she said, one values prevailed was, she said, one in which Britain became great; when great things were achieved by voluntary action (including the building of schools and hospitals on an unparalleled scale) and when people who prospered used their independence and initiative to typeser others. prosper others.

ht was, in short, a vision to scandalise the strange personality of Lab-Lib England as represented by The Guardian, which saw it not simply as a restatement of the basic Conservative teaching of self-help, thrift and individual striving but as implying a return-to the "Victorian tradition" that the poor and disadvantaged should find salvation through the philanthropy of the better off. It suggested that a climate of Victorian deference and fear in industry was a necessary part of her

The conventional Lab-Lib mind detests private charity as a humiliation to its beneficiaries while seeing no humiliation in the queues of suppliants for the dispensations of state bureaucracy. It sees no humiliation in the queues at hospitals and surgeries where doc-tors short of time and frayed of nerves address patients de haut en bas, and where cases of need have to wait in equality with those cases where the need has been created by the over-easy facility. It sees no humiliation in an over-burdened health system where home visits have almost ceased to be a reality and the doctor's receptionist rules.

it sees no humiliation for the suppliant seeking the welfare dispensed by those enjoying their little brief authority as arbiters of social priorities. It sees nothing humiliatng in a system under which a boy or girl's chance of university study hangs wholly on the changing financial climate of the state. It sees nothing humiliating for universities and colleges when they must wait on the funds available to them in any particular year for lack of financial independence, with the result that some are forced into retrenchment that threatens the very existence of valued institutions and departments with money.

To the Lab-Lib mind there is a simple answer to this. Never cut the aid. Go on spending collectively help themselves.

more and more until the boxes of a bankrupt society are all that remains of the spendthrift economy which ladles out money when the soing seems easy and withdraws it in a panic during hard times. State "giving" never allows independence to its beneficiaries, keeping them always dependent.

The same distrust of indepen-dence is found in attitudes to housing. The political left instinctively dislikes private ownership and, still more, private rented accommodation, preferring the council accommodation that can be allocated according to bureaucratic interpretation of social justice. Of course, council accommodation had its origin in a generous concern for those unable to house themselves adequately and for this purpose it will always have a place. But it now also has other overtones. Labour authorities buy up private properties in which they can plant tenants, create dependency and, with luck gain votes.

The case against the existing welfare state is not that it is concerned with the welfare of the people but that it takes a form which gives to government great spending power and a damaging right to provide and withdraw money according to criteria defined by itself at any time. It is a system which has become so all-embracing as to be inimical to real independence and responsiblity. Yet there could be another sort of welfare state. The trouble in Britain is that we have created a bogus equation between the welfare state and the socialist welfare state.

Between now and the election, Mrs Thatcher has to show that her concept of the welfare state could bring better welfare. To admire the independence, energy and phil-anthropy of the Victorians is not to wish to return to their standards of social class and relative riches which were outmoded by the increased wealth, new inventions and new ideas of our century. If people are given reasonable responsibility for themselves, they will tend to act responsibly. If instead they are suppliants at the state's counter, they will grab what they can, for in doing so, they do not see the others that they hurt. They see only the impersonal face behind the counter who pays out but does not really pay. The signs are that an understanding of responsibility is reemerging under this government. If it were not, Mrs Thatcher would not lead in the public opinion polls.

But the Prime Minister needs to be more explicit about the framework of social responsibility within which individual responsibility is to be encouraged, especially in places of work. If the selfishness of militant union leaders is to be rejected, it must be replaced by the partici-pation of workers in a genuine fraternity of the workplace. That is why works councils, profit sharing and participation matter. To be that were encouraged to over-ex- successful Mrs Thatcher's road to a diminution of the state's concern for welfare, but a ceaseless search for what the state can do to help people

As Reagan slips, stand by for summitry

Washington There is a macabre, almost grisly quality about the way in which political society in Washington goes about disposing of presidents whose power or popularity is thought to be

Congress and the press between them sliced up President Carter during his last two years in office like a piece of salami. And now knives are being sharpened around town for Ronald Reagan, who this week begins the second half of his presidential term.

A recent editorial in The New York Times declared that "the stench of failure hangs over Ronald Reagan's White House". Now The New York Times is the flagship of the East Coast liberal establishment and has never been a supporter of Mr Reagan. However, until recently the newspaper, in deference to the President's popularity and the scale of his early legislative victories, has been notably restrained in its criticism of the Reagan presidency. In the Washington Post, David Broder, one of America's most perceptive political columnists, has pronounced that the phasing out of Reaganism is well under way. But among conservatives also, the people who two years ago saw Reagan as their Sir Galahad, a sense of disillusionment has set in. An editorial in the latest issue of the conservative weekly Human Events, complained that the Administration was adrift.

The fact that Mr Reagan is now under attack from the left and the right could be taken to mean that he is steering a sound course at the centre of the political spectrum. This would appear to be his own interpretation as he intersperses his work days at the White House with leisurely breaks in California and at Camp David. No one, at least; is accusing him of being a workaholic. as they did Mr Carter

However, critics on the left and right are both making the same point - that he has allowed his leadership to become seriously eroded. For right-wingers this loss of authority is demonstrated by the way ideology has given way to pragmatism, and the fact that the advisers whose counsel he heeds most are "moderates" such as Mr James Baker, the White House chief of staff, and middle of the road congressmen such as Senators Howard Baker and Robert Dole.

Conservatives blame these "realists" (a disparaging term in the vocabulary of the radical right) for a string of recent reverses and policy changes. There was the $227,000 million tax increase last August, the five-cents-a-gallon increase in the price of petrol, and a congressional snub to the MX missile. Now the President has been persuaded not only to agree to $8,000m cut in defence spending - one of the rightwingers' sacred cows - but also to consider a whole range of revenueraising schemes (ie taxes) to try to reduce the budget deficit.

Mr Reagan is no longer perceived as the tough leader who was able to carry all before him during the first 18 months of his time in office. For right-wingers he has become overly cautious and unimaginative,

On the other side of the political divide, Mr Reagan's lack of leadership is seen as manifesting itself in his inability to recognize his past errors, in particular the shambles caused by his Administration's economic policies. Although he has recently started tinkering with these policies, he has failed to grasp the basic point that one cannot cut taxes, greatly increase defence spending and still end up with a balanced budget.

Mr Reagan's conduct of foreign policy has also come in for questioning. He appears divided between those in his Administration who favour a tough line with the Soviet Union and those who want to respond more positively to Mr Andropov's peace proposals. His widely-praised Middle East peace initiative is floundering because Israel senses no real pressure from the Reagan Administration to take it seriously. He listens to conflicting advice about how to treat the European allies

There is one relatively easy way for Mr Reagan to overcome this leadership crisis by engaging in summitty. There is growing speculation in Washington that during the course of this year he will not only hold a summit meeting with the Soviet leaders but with the Chinese as well. Summits make good television. They also give the impression of the President as a man of action. If he were to be seen concluding an arms control agree ment with Mr Andropov, this would restore his image as a dynamic leader and enhance his prospects for 1984 - if he decides to run again. And some of the knives which are now being sharpened might be returned to their sheaths.

The single specific recommen-Committee concerns the organization and control of intelligence at the heart of government, Lord Franks admitted that his research into the Falklands fiefdoms from too much inter-episode only enabled him to see ference, even, it seems, from the defects of the joint intelli-prime ministers. Apart from gence machinery in an area of what he described as flow priority". He suggested however, that even on that basis, the . system has become too enclosed, too esoteric. It seemed more willing to devote its assessment entirely to the raw material provided by specialized sources of intelligence, rather than to match that material with all the other evidence from the general domain. Yet, in intelligence it is not so much the acquisition of evidence as its coordination and assessment which require expertise. That was clearly lacking in the case of the Falklands, and the: faults exposed cannot be relied upon not to apply equally to high priority areas such as Britain is more often engaged in around the world.

Apart from this systemic shortcoming, however, Lord Franks went on to question the composition of the Joint Intelligence Committee, the body on which the cabinet relies for all its intelligence assessments. He suggested that it should have a full-time chairman, appointed by than a part-time chairman seconded from one of the other departments of State concerned with intelligence - usually the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

This may all sound quite an innocuous piece of bureaucratic musical chairs, more in tune with the world of "Smiley's People" than the day-to-day conduct of British foreign and defence policy. But it is not.
Lord Franks' understated criticism and recommendation now a chance that the Prime recommendation, and announce week.

On March 3rd Mrs Thatcher

read a telegram from the British Ambassador in Buenos Aires and noted on it. "We must make contingency plans," Her private secretary followed this up with promptings to the foreign and the defence ministries, and the Cabinet Office, a few days later. was believed that Lord Carrington would bring a paper to the cabinet's Defence Committee "in the fairly near future". In the meantime Mrs Thatcher also asked Mr Nott for detailed reaction times to deploy warships. His answer took four days. Lord Carrington's paper never materialized because he did not feel ready to bring it forward. In the face of such extraordinary the Prime Minister and belong-dilatoriness by both ministers ing to the Cabinet Office, rather and their officials - always allowing for the many other distractions they had in the course of their work - it is abundantly clear that the Prime Minister needs a "produose" of wisdom and seniority to carry out the function identified by Lord Franks as Chairman of a reconstituted Joint Intelligence Committee -

But there should be more to the appointment than that. Intelligence is the most political branch of warfare, which is why it tends to become neglected, or mask a flaw which has lain at the even disapproved of, in peacevery heart of government vir- time. > What a modern British prime minister needs now in the Cabinet Office is a cross between an Ismay, who was military Secretary of Churchill's war cabinet, and a Gubbins, who presided over all other kinds of special operation. A man in that appointment would provide the coordinated approach to intelligence operations and to the strategic use of information, which has been dangerously missing from the centre of British government.

> It is an appointment which will, of course, be resisted. It will be resisted both inside Whitehall and outside - inside because the departments do not like the idea that informatiion can and must be used as an offensive arm of strategy; and outside because one of the fallacies which was ushered in with the era of detente was that political warfare was against the rules.

> The Information and Research Department of the Foreign Office was created for this purpose in 1948 and flourished for some years. Under the pressures of detente, however, it was gradually under-nourished until Dr Owen as Foreign Secretary finally re-moved the drip-feed in 1977 and killed it off.

> > The Franks report, and the narrowly escaped fiasco in the Falklands, have revitalized the case for such a body and such an appointment. There are woeful passages in Franks which depict governments of both parties entirely at a loss to know how to proceed further beyond simply "some sort of negokeeping going. How-lucky for Britain that this total loss of initiative occurred when we were confronted by the confused and incompetent dictatorship in

Their value is appreciated by all those who look to Parliament not only to provide a high class of political drama but to scrutinise the conduct of government. Departof the parliamentary system which any future government of whatever complexion would seek to abolish at its peril.

So much so that the task is no longer to consider whether their existence is justified, but to examine how they might be improved. The report goes to the heart of the matter when it states: "for the future we are concerned to see that there should be closer ties between the work done by members in select committees and on the floor of the House". Up to now the select committees have had to rely for heir influence almost entirely spon the power of publicity. The performance of the Some improvement is committees has inevitably been made this session in the arrange-ments for scrutinising public ments for scrutinising public expenditure. The Liaison Committee will determine how to allocate these three days between one set of Esti-mates and another after each select committee has considered the Estimates for the department it is shadowing. Select com-mittees and indeed individual MPs will be able to make representations to the Liaison Committee.

This should be a useful step in the right direction, but not a lasting solution. The best course now would be to allocate more than three days for this purpose; to see how the experiment works; and then to take the principle of detailed examination of the Estimates a stage further.

There is also a case for giving committees more permanent staff than they are now permitted. Many of them have received valuable assistance from specialist advisers, but their services need to be supplemented by a greater number of permanent staff.

In this, as in so much else, there is the fear of the sceptics and the timid that these committees might come to suffer from the excesses of Congressional committees Washington. It would certainly be undesirable for British committees to be staffed at that inflated level. But it is not going to happen. The danger at Westminster is that select committees will continue to be

Doubts on youth training plans

From Mr J. W. Wood

Sir, Two items concerning the Government's Youth Training Scheme in your issue of January 18 cast doubt on either the wisdom or the sincerity of the programme or both.

Ther first is the story that the Government will pay £100 a head to "jobs brokers" as "commission" on each opportunity created.

The second is the first advertisement in the Government's £3m campaign to promote the scheme. If the point of the scheme were really to create the maximum number of opportunities for youths to gain experience and employment then one would expect to see youths given the opportunity to administer it rather than £100-a-head brokers. One would also expect to see other youths given the opportunity to create the advertisements rather than £100,000-a-year advertising

One might also see a gratifying elevation in both administrative and advertising standards, Yours sincerely.

JOHN W. WOOD, Chairman, Wood, Brigdale and Company Ltd. Advertising, Kent House, Market Place, W1. January 18.

War disabled

From Professor A. I. Ogus

Sir. There are even more serious anachronisms in the war pensions scheme than those described by Mr Edward Pool (January 14). Most notably, to receive the higher rate of the standard pension, a widow of the highest ranking officers (in the Army, lieutenant-colonel and above) need not satisfy the conditions imposed on a widow of other ranks, that she is over 40, has care of a child, or is incapable of self-support. The scheme apparently assumes that it is inappropriate for ladies of such standing to earn their livelihood.

One reason for the continued existence of some of these dated provisions is surely that the war pensions scheme has never been subjected to the public critical scrutiny typical for other areas of our welfare.

Yours faithfully, A. L. OGUS, Faculty of Law. The University Newcastle upon Tyne. January 14.

Music in schools From Mrs Jane Reid

Sir, As an ex-peripatetic violin teacher in one of the northern cities of the country, I would like to point out to Dr B. J. Coffin (January 12) that if thirtion was not itee. musical activity would certainly not involved in party politics, but am flourish in many schools. Though I am sure there are many parents in Surrey who would be prepared to purchase instruments and music and pay for lessons, I do not feel this is typical of the majority of parents in other areas.

In a large number of education authorities many pupils who other-wise would not have had the opportunity have been able to develop their talents and have become competent musicians.

The Surrey "gin and Jag" set is in a different financial league and should not be used as an example to illustrate this point. Yours faithfully, TANE REID. 30 East Beach, Lytham, Laucashire.

Classical top ten

From Professor David Gwilt

January 13.

Sir, David Chesterman's analysis (January 6) of the top ten classical symphonists by number of performances in the major halls of London, while interesting, leaves something to be desired. After all, there is a wide discrepancy in the number of entries of each composer.

A handicapping system might serve to add spice to the competition and would probably see Brahms, with only four entries, winning going away; Haydn, with over 100, struggling in the straight; and Havergal Brian, with 32, nowhere. Would not this give a better indication of the true staying power of the great symphonists? Yours faithfully, DAVID GWILT, Department of Music, The Chinese University of Hongkong,

Sir. The Times of January 14 included "World Communications a Special Report". One of the contributions, by your Science Editor, Mr Pearce Wright, was about direct broadcasting by satellite (DBS) and centred largely on the recent report of the Government advisory panel, which I chaired, Mr Wright's piece, which was written without prior consultation with me, contained three important inaccuracies. Will you please allow me to correct them?

First, he wrote that "the Part report has triggered a furious argument between development engineers". The opposite is the case: my panel was appointed because of the argument. Our recommendation. in favour of the IBA was approved by the Government shortly after it though with understandable reluc-tance, by the Chairman of the BBC; by the polytechnic. From Councillor John Gunnell and contemplate a diminution of the

The 1972 reorganization cost hundreds of millions of pounds.
Abolition of metropolitan counties will involve an outlay and recurring costs on a similar scale. What savings will pay for these costs? The bulk of our spending is on the wages of policemen, firemen, highway maintenance and refuse dispos men and so on. They would still have to be paid.

Nor would there be savings on administration. Joint boards for police, fire, the arts, refuse disposal, public transport, highways and consumer protection would each require their own bureaucracies. How would the costs of separate idministrative units for each service be less than those of the current joint administration?

Again a whole host of relatively minor services are now provided on a county-wide basis with far greater effect and economy than could a district or joint boards: archives, the public analyst, coroners, archaeo-logical units, pension fund investment, are some of them. Joint boards, too, spend more than councils who have to balance the rival claims of competing services.

The loss of accountability and effectiveness would be serious. The responsibilities of district councillors are to their own districts. By definition they could not come to a county-wide view. In West Yorkshire one district has run out of space for tipping - would another volunteer to take the waste? Three of five districts benefit from computerized urban traffic control - would the other two agree to fund it? Leeds is the home of Opera North - would the other four districts make a major contribution to stabilize its future as the County Council has done?

If these important services failed, how would the electorate respond? Surely, too, this is not the week to

Aiding owner-occupiers

From Mr Robert Kahn Sir, The Building Societies Association proposal (report, January 11) to raise the ceiling for tax relief on mortgage interest from £25,000 to £50,000 is neither timely nor equitable. At a time of continuing public expenditure cuts it would be a gross misuse of limited public funds to direct further tax relief to owneroccupiers in this particular manner. The recently published English house-condition survey has documented how nearly a quarter of the housing stock is in unsatisfactory condition, being unfit, lacking amenities or requiring repairs costing in excess of £2,500. Many of these houses are owned by elderly people and others with low incomes In fact, the largest number of dwellings in poor condition were columns, that the corporation would now put their full weight behind the report. Second, Mr Wright stated that the Extended PAL system proposed by the BBC to my panel was compatible with existing terrestrial TV standards. This is not the case. All European countries agree that any system adopted for DBS should include a digital sound and data system. As my panel's report explained, such systems are totally incompatible with existing terrestrial techniques and have far greater implications for the receiving equipment than have the difference between picture transmission methods. Third, he suggested that the proposal from the Plymouth Polytechnic was preferable to the MAC system and was at about the same stage of development. This does not accord with the information given to current year. This put it outside the time-scale prescribed for us by the Home Secretary and the detailed evaluation and further development that would inevitably be needed ruled it out as a practical proposition, quite apart from the international negotiations required. MAC, on the other hand, has been demonstrated for some 18 months and the process of refining the specifications is now in its final stages.

To sum up, this country has in

MAC a system developed by the IBA, preferred by the manufac-turers, recommended by the panel, approved by the Government and accepted by the BBC. The task now is to persuade our friends in Europe of its merits. This requires a coordinated effort. I have reason to suppose that it will be forthcoming. Reflections over Tasmanian dam

From Professor Kenneth Mellanby

Sir, Conservationists of all colours must sympathise with my friend, Dr David Bellamy, and the other protesters in Tasmania who (report, January 18) are trying to preserve the integrity of one of the last large areas of wilderness in the world. There is no doubt of its ecological value. There is some doubt as to the extent of the damage the dam and hydroelectric works would cause. I should like to be certain that the environmental damage caused by not building the dam would not be greater.

We all wish to make the greatest possible use of renewable energy which does not deplete fossil fuel stocks and does not pollute the atmosphere. Here hydroelectric power is ideal - if it does not cause other, unacceptable, effects, Some of the protesters have said that the same amount of electric power could more easily be pro-duced by burning Tasmanian coal. Without the introduction to a coalfired power station of expensive modifications which could still present difficulties this would contribute to the acid rain problem, something about which I am sure the protesters are equally concerned. Acid rain might be controlled, but increased coal-burning would undoubtedly add to atmospheric carbon dioxide. This is probably the most difficult and controversial problem facing mankind. It may be totally unimportant; it may be by far the most dangerous pollution problem, possibly, and in not so many years, causing widespread flooding of farmland and cities and climatic changes which could turn food-producing countries into We simply do not know the answer. Until we do, it is surely only common sense to do everything we can to contain global carbon-dioxide levels. The most important source of carbon dioxide is coal. I do not wish to damage our or anyone cise's coal industry, but I agree with those scientists who think that there is a real possibility that we may not be, able to use many of our coal stocks as energy sources, and that all plans for coal development should be very carefully scrutinized. The Tasmanian problem, to the genuine environmentalist, is clearly not as simple as some of the protesters suggest. Yours faithfully, KENNETH MELLANBY,

Former President of Argentina

Dr Arturo Illia, who was the elected President of Argentina from October 1963 until his overthrow by the armed forces in June 1966, died in Cordoba, Argentina, on January 18 at the age of 82. During his time in office, Illia did much to restore civil liberties and the working of democracy; and by comparison with its more recent straits the economy was reasonably healthy. But he encountered virulent opposition from the Peronists, who were responsible for riots, and from the armed forces, who disliked what they saw as the disorder of democracy. It was during Illia's presidency that the first moves were made towards diplomatic settlement of the Falklands dispute. As a result of Argentine pressure the United Nations General Assembly adopted a resolution in 1965 calling for negotiations, and Britain and

Battle for state industries

Leaders of our nationalized industries are most concerned about a Private Member's Bill which had its first reading in Parliament on Tuesday.

The brainchild of Mr Norman St John Stevas with backing among Con-servatives from Mr Edward Du Cann, and among Liberals from Mr Richard Wainwright - the Parliamentary Control of Expenditure (Reform) Bill could dramatically change the cut overtime or put workers on the fourth quarter of 1981, way nationalized industries short time.

Tank", says basically that the government department should act like a holding company board. It should map out the philosophy and monitor progress, but should leave the actual running of the businesses to its managers.

Though a private mem-

Travel to New York, at our expense, over the air instead of in the air.

If your company does significant business with New York, this is a vitally important offer. Now you and three or more of your key executives can conduct a face-to-face meeting with your New York associates without leaving London. Call the Hotel Inter-Continental London for information about a free trial. It's a whole new way of looking at the overseas business meeting.

Introducing INTELMET VideoConferencing System: For businesses with their feet on the ground.

INTELMET, the world's first two-way international VideoConferencing system, is today's cost-effective and time-efficient way of being in two places at once. Here in the heart of London, we have a permanent, luxuriously furnished conference suite with state-of-theart equipment. The high quality audio and video systems are discreetly placed, so that your attention is focused on the meeting, not on the equipment. A four by four foot screen projects dramatic feedback from business associates thousands of miles away in New York as well as films, charts and graphs. A high-resolution scanner can project complex documents on another giant screen. And, if you wish, this system will produce hard copies in New York in a matter of seconds.

The merits of VideoConferencing can only be fully appreciated in person. Demonstration time is limited, so arrange to visit the VideoConferencing suite of the Hotel Inter-Continental London soon. Call Debbie Brand on 01-409 3131 for reservations.

INVESTORS' NOTEBOOK Trusthouse takes comfort from UK profits rise

Trusthouse Forte Year to 31.10.82 Pretax profit £57.1m (£52.3m) Stated earnings 12p (11.4p)
Turnover £915.4m (£844.7m)
Net final dividend 5.5p making 7p
Share price 189p, up 5p. Yield Dividend payable 7.4.83

City estimates of what Trusthouse Forte might carn in the year to October 31 varied from £58m to £62m, so the eventual outturn of £57.1m was a shade disappointing.

But the increase in the dividend came as a pleasant surprise - even if it is not quite covered on a full tax-charge and with a bullish report on current trading it was enough to send the share price ahead.

Most of the difference between estimated and actual profits seems to stem from a lower profit on porperty disposals – down from £7.2m to

The strength of THF in the past year has been in Britain, where profits have risen from £34m to £41.7m in the hotel division, after a slow start to the year, and from £14.9m to £17.8m in catering.

In the United States, THF had done well to reduce catering lossed by £1.6m to £300,000, Electronic lossed by £1.6m to £300,000, Electronic lossed by £1.6m to £300,000, but hotel profits are down from f 10 2m to f8 8m

It is not difficult to see profits advancing to £65m in the current year. On a fully-taxed on a p/e of around 20. But THE is the only "pure" hotel company of marketable size.

Electronics

Given that the first half at Racal Electronics saw a comfortable pretax profits increase of 22 per cent to £46.98m, the second half is turning out very disappointing. Comments from the company yesterday confirmed analysts' fears that profits for the year would be between £115m and £125m - up on last year's £102.61m, but a lot lower than the £130m plus originally anticipated.

Recal Electronics Helf-year to 15.10.82. Pretax profit 246.98m (238.44m). Stated earnings 10.85p (8.76p) Turnover 2359.07m (2303.50m). Net interim dividend 1.3915p (1.265p). Share price 484p down 63p Yield

Hard decisions about the West Germany sales company, which made an even worse loss last year, will be taken any day. So there could be more extraordinary costs this year. Gestetner has some powerful shareholders like the National Coal Board pension fund. If they have had words the family board - with control more than 60 per cent of the shares - is not saying.

A nominal dividend is being paid on all classes of share.

Racal was thinking in terms of much this year as originally sales of £800m this year, but anticipated, but the share price they are more likely to be is now reflecting this. Dr Ingram Lenton, managing director, said yesterday that the company's operations in North America had been hit by a combination of the United States recession and substantial over capacity in papermaking.

The price of newsprint had held up since it fell last November, but he felt the company would feel the effects of the United States recession in the second half of 1982 and most of 1983.

He expected the newsprint supply and demand balance to be restored by 1984, and from 1986 there would be a further boost from full rotation of the company's United States timberlands.

Dr Lenton saw "no need at the moment for a rights issue" but added: "If the debenture market took off and we could raise long-term finance at the right price, it would tempt us." Bowater had also been building businesses in the United Kingdom and Europe which were not capital intensive

AGB rights issue to raise £14.5m

AGB Research, the consumer and industrial market research company, is to have a rights issue to raise £14.5m after expenses. Terms of the issue are one new share at 250p for every four shares held. The shares closed yesterday up 20p to 3.2%

AGB has also released its interim results to the end of October, 1982. Pretax profits were up 17 per cent to £2.38m on turnover 57 per cent higher at £28m. Net margins during the period slipped from 11.3 per cent to 9.3 per cent - largely because of a swing from interest receivable to interest payable and tougher publishing con-ditions, the company said.

Publishing trading profits increased form £136,000 to £141,000. But the strongest performances came from information systems with a 48 per cent increase to £126,000, market research, with a 29 per cent rise to £2m and marketing

£346,000. The results include contri-butions from NFO, the big market research company acquired last July for an initial

AGB has made several other acquisitions recently, including a 95 per cent stake in Medical Market Studies; the remaining 70 per cent of Mitech Data Customs; and a further 40 per cent of QED International Marketing Research Services, bringing AGB's holding in the company to 60 per cent. It is also about to invest in Survey Research Group, the Asian market research specialist.

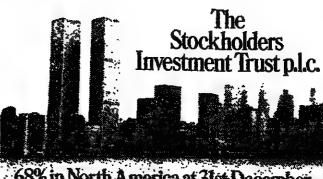

All these acquisitions have contributed to a, £7.8m overdraft and loans of £4.8m. funds to reduce borrowings and to expand existing operations. The latter will involve setting up overseas many of the services now firmly established payment of £3.5m, and Wes- in the United Kingdom.

Five-star hotels lose their staying power as construction costs rise of the high costs involved While there may be little new development, sales of existing properties have taken off during the last few months.

In this sense the Government was probably right to put the British Transport Hotels chain of 21 properties up for tender, according to Mr Nicholas Lepard of consultants Greene Belfield-Smith & Co. Recent fails in inflation, interest rates and sterling have all contributed to a realization that the steady downward drift of profits and occupancy levels of hotels may be halted and even reversed.

- The industry is becoming more optimistic and large groups such as Grand Metropolitan are experiencing a big It started when GM acquired the Intercontinental Hotel chain from Pan Am just over a year ago for $500m, according to Mr Lepard. Through the purchase GM extended its range of top class luxury hotels, which already included the Europa and the Brittania, in Grosvenor Square as well as more downmarket properties as the Mount Royal and the Piccadilly.

GM quickly realized its range of properties was too diverse and rationalization made sense Last January the group decided to dispose of as many as 10 hotels, but did not reveal which were to go.

As an executive put it at the time: "We are hanging out the washing and seeing what comes what actually came along was quite surprising. Some 26 of GM's provincial hotels were snapped up by the Queens Moat Houses chain headed by Mr John Bairstow in a deal worth

The deal took the GM County Hotels division off the late Sir Maxwell Joseph's hands and more than doubled the size of Oucens Most. Apart from the main tranche properties acquired by Queens Moat, occasional sales have taken place since then such as the purchase of the London International by the Vaux Breweries subsidiary, Swallow Hotels, for £7.7m.

But since last winter there has been a more subtle change in the hotel market. A stronger secondary market in hotel properties has been established as some of the larger groups offload their less desirable

But the centre of the hotel business remains firmly in the capital where, according to Mr Jonathan Bodlender of consult-ants Horwath and Horwath, occupancy levels show a distinct improvement.

Mr Bodlender believes the weaker pound is starting to bring Americans back to London and any upturn in their economy will benefit the hotel industry here,

Solutions

The stark reality that has to be faced in the interim is that as the Brandt Commission expressed it, "the magnitude of the problem the crisis or contraction is throwing up dwarfs the magnitude of the practicable solutions".

In other words, we have no assurance that, when all the available stops have beer pulled out - IMF quotas increased, World Bank lend ing liberalized, special releases made of SDRs, debt repayment obligations waived and so on - that crisis will not continue to roll on remorse-

The moral, surely, is that we now have to start considering "inpracticable solutions".

The firmer pound caught dealers on the hop yesterday as share prices recovered from a nervous start prompted by the decision of the market bears to wind up their positions.

Even the disappointing interim figures from Racal Electronics and subsequent Electronics and subsequent warning on second-half profits failed to cast a shadow. The market which had been looking for profits of £130m for the year has now downgraded the figure to around £115m. As a result the share price responded with a fall of 63p to 484p as a line of 250,000 shares came on offer at around the 480p level. Last night analysts and City institutions were making their way to the Royal Lancaster Hotel in London to pose their own London to pose their own questions at a seminar arranged by the group. The rest of the electrical sector was also marked lower with Plessey 20p down at 602p, although GEC closed unchanged at 204p, after touching 194p carlier.

The FT Index closed 6.8 up at 621.6, wiping out all of Tuesday's fall stemming from the pound fluctuations on the foreign exchange.

Gilts also replaced earlier losses of up to £14, with gains of £15 in longs, but turnover was described as low and the Bank of England confirmed that tenders for the £750m of Treasury 215, per cent indexlinked 2016 had been alloted in full. Dealings begin today.

full. Dealings begin today. Day: Corporation jumped 3p to 80p ahead of today's interim statement on hopes that the half-year dividend will be main-tained, which puts the shares on an historic yield of more than 13 per cent. Taxable profits are expected to slump from £6.6m to between £2m and £3m. Among blue chips BAT Industries led the way with a leap of 24p to 688p following our report yesterday that the shares looked cheap.

were limited to around $3.

The holding companies were sought after with jobbers again caught short of stock as Middle Wits rose £\(^1\hat_1\) to $11\(^1\hat_2\) and Barlow Rand 24p to 644p.

On the bid front shares of little E. Austin, the forklift truck group, raced ahead 23p to a new high of 45p after the company high of 45p after the company announced it was in talks which could lead to an offer being made for it. The company, which last year made losses of £159,000, is currently valued at £19m

FOOTBALL: BLOW FOR ENGLAND AND SCOTLAND

Liverpool put club before country

Liverpool will refuse to release any of the club's international players to tour with their countries this summer. The League cham-pions say they need all of them for their own oversesses tour, which is essential for financial reasons. England and Scotland are the two countries who could be affected by

Liverpool's decision. England, with Neal, Lee and Thompson international regulars, expect to make an Scotland, who have Sonness, Scotland, who have Sonness, Dalglish and Hansen in their team, will probably decide by the end of this week whether a proposed four of Canada goes ahead. Wales and the Republic of Ireland, who also include Anfield players, have no plans to tour.

Liverpool's general secretary, Peter Robinon said: "It is not that we don't want to help the international sides, it is just a matter of looking after our own interests at a time when we need every penny we can get.

We can get.

"It is the clubs after all who are the backbone of our national game and it is the clubs who develop and pay the players. Since 1960 there has been an agreement that we would release our players three summers out of four to tour with their countries. But now the FA wants the fourth as well. It is the principle we are concerned with. We keel we must be concerned with the well-we must retain the right to use our own players occasionally in the summer months for the benefit of the club.

"We cannot afford to turn down the offer of lucrative tours and for such trips you need all your best players." So far Liverpool have not arranged a tour, although offers are

Derby kept waiting at hearing

Derby County will learn today whether their appeal to the Football Association against a £10,000 fine imposed by the Football League has been successful. The fine came after the former England centre half end his assistant at Bradford, Mick Jones, only days after Taylor had been appointed.

City's chairman, Bob Martin, dominated yesterday's proceedings with nearly five hours of evidence, the contract of the cont the League management committee had decided that Derby broke rules So and 80 when their former player, leaving his Derby counterpart, Mike Roy McFarland, resigned as player. Watterson, Taylor, McFarland and manager of the third division clab. Jones waiting until today for their terms to the Baschall Ground as team manager under Peter Taylor.

Bradford City, in November to term and the Baseball Ground as The three men on the FA board team manager under Peter Taylor.

A three-man FA board inquiry met at London's Great Western the Army FA, and Leslie Mackay, of the London FA. But after six hours, during which evidence was submitted by Bradford City and the League, the hearing "a fluke of a goel" in their League was adjourned until today.

Derby claim they did not "poach" Highbury on Tuesday night. The England international, Tony Wood-cock provided the finishing touch to a 69th minute move to send Arsenal into the last four with a 1-0 win but Wetinesday's manager said: "The goal came as much as a surprise to Arsenal as it did to me. It fell very unkindly for us."

The Yugoslav player, Viadimir Petrovic, provided the centre that let to Woodcock's eleventh goal of the season but apart from that the season but, apart from that, there was little to warm the 30,000 there was little to warm the 30,000 spectators. "It was a difficult tie. We were on a hiding to nothing," Terry Neill, the Arsenal manager, said.

Neill, however, ought to be worried about the lack of punch up front, with Alan Sunderland the main culprit when it came to squandering chances.

Bonn (Reuter) - The followers of Hamburg, the West German champions seem to be difficult to resumes this weekend after the winter break Hamburg, who are at home to Nuremburg, will be defending a record unbesten run of games. The supporters remain unimpressed. This season stiendances at the Volksparkstadion are almost. 10,000 down on last season's average of 33,000. Club officials are worried by the dwindling crowds, particularly as 36,000 are needed at each game just to break even.

They are also prizzled because Hamburg's fluent attacking style. which has brought them 42 goals in 17 games, could reasonably have been expected to keep the turnstiles clicking merrily.
Although the city of Hamburg is suffering from above average unemployment, recession alone cannot explain the mystery. The answer, many critics say, is that Hamburg are simply too good. Their supporters are stated by success and bored by their predictable winning

Hamburg, two points ahead of Bayern Munich, have acquired such an air of invincibility that rival managers and players openly suggest that their amazing unbeaten run could well last for the rest of the season.

One of the missing thousands from the Volksparksnadion appears to be the national team manager. Jupp Derwall, who has largely ignored the Hamburg men as he rebuilds the West German team for

England's leading lady set for her closing act championships, sponsored by Norwich Union, at the Nation

Sports Centre, Cardiff, today.
Mrs Hammersley-Parker, a former European champion, has won the English national title a record seven times. Now, at the age of 31, and after two months' rest, she is back in the limelight, for her final season of full-time competition.

She joins the field for the leading

Mrs Hammersley-Parker has won both the Welsh and the top twelve events before and, if she could win again, it would be a fitting finish for one of the best liked and most skilful defensive players of all time. She is the top seed at Cardiff because the only woman ranked above her in Europe, Bettine Vriesckopp, of the Netherlands, is not playing, and she will also be helped by the late withdrawal of the second seed, Ann-Christin Hellstran, the Swedish number one. It is one-time European champion, Gabor Gergely, in the quarter-finals, the former world champion Stellan Bengtsson, in the semi-finals, and should he make it to the final, his likely opponent is Europe's man of the moment, Maikarl Appelgren, the young Swede who won the European ton twelve titles in one

Because of the uncertainty about running plans the betting takes a wide range. The Tote have bracketed Crown and Even Banker together as their joint favourites at 16-1. Ladhroke's have Rare Gift and Baroog as their first choices in the market at the same price. The sponsors, Hills, on the other hand, take a different view in installing Pulse Rate and Chris's Lad at the head of affairs, also at 16-1.

To try and analyse the chances of the leading funcies at this early stage would be a pointless exercise. No horse is likely to win the Lincoln unless he has undergone a thorough preparation or is fit from hurding. as are Pulse Rate and Rare Gift. Crown is sure to be a live candidate. This consistent four-year-old wou four races for the Yorkshire trainer Charlie Booth last season. He started his campaign with a successful visit to Cagnes-sur-Mar and then landed a gamble in a seven-furloog handicap at Doncast-er the same afternoon that King's Glory won the Lincoln.

Booth said yesterday, "Crown does not look too badly treated with 7st 10th and I am seriously considering training him for the race. I am taking some horses to the south of Prance again this winter. Crown will not be among them but I could give him a preparatory race at Saint-Cloud in the middle of March." In point of fact, Crown appears to have his fair share of weight — for example he is set to meet Nioulargo on 12lb and four lengths worse terms than when the pair finished second and third in the Britannia Stakes at Royal Ascot, But Singer is a presupence consideration. fitness is a paramount consideration

CRICKET: ENGLAND MUST FIGHT BACK IN WORLD SERIES CUP

Odds lengthen against England reaching final

England meet New Zealand in the Beuson and Hedges World Series
Cup here today, knowing that if they lose it will be long odds against their reaching the finals of the competition. England have decided to waituntil the last moment before announcing their side, though rowler and Pringle are both being arare bird - a cricketer who looks considered for a place. New Zealand are hopeful that their captain, Howarth, who took a nasty knock content had on Tuesday evening will be fit to play.

Cricket was more leisurely in my day, Dexter says

A man who always played the game and had time to smell the flowers

You will have noticed, I am sure, that recent echo from the past, a stirring of memories as with an old Gene Kelly film on a wet Sunday afternoon. I refer to the wining of the President's Putter by Ted Dexter, at the age of 47, after three previous losing one of the most exciting natural strikers of a ball this country as ever seen was that he was still seemingly as lean and hungry as when hitting Hall and Griffin to all points of the compass in his junforgettable 70 at Lord's in 1963. It has been embarrassing these last few weeks to watch men carning £50,000 a year from the game going into Test matches with midriffs more appropriate to darts players training on bitter, a fact sardonically rubbed in by the humourists on Sydney's Hill with their release of a piglet affection-ately named after two of our style Dexter, whose technique with either bat or club was always more fundamental to his exploits than that cavalier attacking attitude, put into perspective even more the wretchedness of Enwaving the bat about like Parisian waving the bat about like Parisian gendarnes on point duty, and there has regularly been enough space between front foot and bat—vir Randall—through which to waitz Matilda. Such slovenly technique would not have been tolerated in the under-16 nets of the parising the between the learner would not be the between the learner would not be the between the presentations. my youth under the benevolent but stern eye of the lovable George Geary.

What I wonder did Dexter think of it all, this former captain and supreme all-rounder, who averaged 48 in 62 Test matches with 66 wickets at 35 apiece, and prematurely resired just when it had become financially acceptable in the mid-sixties for Gentlemen to be Players? Did he envy money, as one who led a team easy money, as one who led a team including Sheppard, Cowdrey, Barrington, Graveney, Trueman, Statham and Titmus? The answer was predictable.

"On balance, I would rather have been playing when I did. It was more leisurely, there was time to smell the flowers, so to speak. While I don't subscribe to the view. while I tim' subscribe to the view that today's players have not the same passion and desire to beat.

Anstralia, I do feel that professionals have not yet achieved a really professional standard. I couldn't consciously agree that they are better than we were and I they are better than we were, and I mentally, both the county and one-day game, but there is not enough background direction."

Dexter believes the answer may lie with the selectors - that the men who determine whether a player earns £10,000 a year or £50,000 a year must become more involved in the structure of

involved in the structure of coaching, team management and guidance of younger players; that with a proper regional coaching framework, embracing the 30 players most likely to be called up for a Test party, many of the problems which have become apparent in Australia could have been discovered in advance.

They say that sometimes Lord Ted, as the popular papers dubbed him, gave his wicket lightly, because his heart was not always in the game. Yet he captained Sussex for six years, 10 times in a season passed 1,000 runs and placed as many notable defensive played as many notable defensive innings to save a Test as he did attacking innings to attempt to win them. He shudders now at the with them. He shutders how at the sight of our roly-poly bowlers, and the allegation that one of our pacemen has hardly bowled a ball in net practice from Perth to

In my day and before, the spinners ripped their spinning finger to the bone; they were never without a split in the flesh, but you never hear of that today. They just don't spin the ball the same. The one day game is mostly to blame. The batsmen are told by the captain to watch the first two balls and then hit, and against one-day bowling, often get away with it.

He admits now to having been more prone to nerves and to have worked harder at imporvement than the way the legend was fast men slow down for accuracy, the swingers don't swing it so as to stay on line, the spinners don't

Dexter spans the years with bat and club

"When I started my cricke career, I was just a good schoolboy player who hit hard, but hard at Cambridge and by the end was reasonably accomplished. People say I had a good golf swing, but it could have been better, and but it could have been better, and there have always been some pretty fundamental flaws — a moderate short game and a temperament considered to be suspect. I suppose I would otherwise have taken those earlier opportunities to win the Puner

"Yet, you know, temperament is partly a matter of luck, because a seemingly carefree temperament like Trevino's can be as successful as a dour, determined character. I think a tournament professional's life must be terrifying. I wouldn't have stood up to it. I think cricket is an easier game, partly because of the team factor, though batting is a bit like golf – scary to start with but if you play the early shots well, it gets easier. But in golf, one wrong shot and suddenly you can wonder if you will ever hit the thing again, people have different sorts of defence mechanisms. Some good players are so wooden they never see the problem!

Team

"I've had more nerves than had been apparent – as when I blew the Gold Vase at Sunnindale when I was six under fours, and needed three, four to finish in 65, and took four, six and tied with Costerbuis. Along came Bonsallack and got down in two from 150 yards at the last to beat us both.

"I've had my satisfaction out of golf. It's been just about right, through the year I made a really serious effort. I just missed qualifying for the Open, hitting the hole and staying out from aix feet. That would have been nice, to be there with Nicklaus. My attitude to both golf and cricket has always been the same: to play well was more important than to win, maybe too much so. I'd rather go round in 69 and lose, than 76 and

"In cricket, you have to try for the team's sake not to be selfish, but I couldn't help enjoying a stylish 30 more than a scratchy 70.

I'd come home some days, and Susan would ask how I'd played. and I'd say 'Spot on'. She'd ask how many, and then look suprised when I said '38'. But I feel when I captained England in Australia cored runs that mattered.

"I never took a salary from Sussex, just a reasonable amount of expenses, and when we were allowed to be paid by England, it was then only £100 or so for a test. I suppose if I'd been playing now, with the money there is, I'd have been locked in like the rest of them, keeping going as long as possible. But what about the second half of your life?"

One owner vehicle had five keepers

Regina v South Western Justices, Ex parte Wandsworth London Borough Council
Before Lord Justice Kerr and Mr Justice Glidewell [Judgment delivered January [7]

Where a motor car hired to five different companies under leasing arrangements was subsequently described as having had one described as having had one previous owner, this was capable of being a false or misleading trade description within the meaning of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968. Accordingly, the South Western purchaser, Mr Molloy, had noticed of the car had referred to five former a reference in the registration document to the number of former who had been in effect its constitution because as being five. words "one owner". Justices had erred in law in deciding that because legal ownership of the car had remained vested in a single leasing company throughout, the description "one owner" was incapable of being misleading, and the defendants, Hallcrest Garages Ltd, had no case to answer.

Lord Justice Kerr sitting with Mr Justice Glidewell in the Queen's Bench Divisional Court, so held quashing the dismissal of the case against the defendants and ordering a rehearing. the justices, the defendants had

Mr Richard Mawrey for Wandsworth London Borough Council; Mr Mark Harris for Hallcrest Garages Ltd; the justices did not appear and were not represented.

LORD JUSTICE KERR said that the car, a 1975 Daimler, had been purchased in 1980 from Hallcrest Garages, who carried on business as

They had acquired the car from a company. Barry Jones Ltd., who were the hirers of the car, which was actually owned by a leasing company, who had bought it new, it had been leased out under a series of leasing agreements to no fewer than five hirers. Barry Jones Ltd had been the last, and had then sold the car on behalf of the leasing company, which had remained its legal owner throughout.

the car had been sold under a description which included the the Trade Descriptions Act 1968, on the ground that the defendants had supplied or offered to supply the Daimler under a false trade description.

When the matter had come before submitted that they had no case to answer. It was their contention that as a matter of strict legal meaning there had only been one owner, namely the leasing company.

The applicants had said that any normal purchaser seeing the description "one owner" would take controlled and maintained by only One person. His Lordship said that such a view was supported throughout the legislation concerning road vehicles. The examples showed that in the context of road vehicles, the word

"owner" meant the person in possession of the vehicle. By section 196(1) of the Road Traffic Act 1972, all the obligations normally cast upon owners were also cast upon buers of vehicles as the persons in possession of them. Regulation 3 of the Road Vehicles The point taken was that (Registration 3 of the Road ventraling) Regu-although there had been five hirers. Intions (SI 1971 No 450) interpreted as its owner the person by whom a vehicle was kept.

Following complaints by him, the local authority, Wandsworth London Borough Council, brought a prosecution under section 1(1)(b) of the car as having had "one owner" was prima facie clearly capable of being misleading and therefore a false trade description under sections 3(2) and 2(1)(j) of the 1968 Act. The justices ought: therefore to have called on the defence to answer the case. In deciding that because legal ownership had remained vested in the leasing company throughout it was impossible for the description: to have been false, the justices had clearly erred in law.

His Lordship said that Mr Harris. on behalf of the defendants, had submitted that this was a case which should have proceeded by way of case stated instead of by way of judicial review.

He had been referred to Chie; Constable of the North Wales Police v Evans ([1982] I WLR [155] in support of that contention, but his Lordship could find nothing in it which supported Mr Harris's submission; and having considered R v Knightsbridge Crown Court, Ex parte Aspinal Curzon Ltd (The Times, December 16, 1982) ir, which a more liberal approach had been taken, he concluded that there was nothing to prevent the court proceeding by way of judicial review-where it was clear that the justices had erred in law.

Accordingly, the application should be granted, the dismissal of the case quashed and the matter reheard.

Mr Justice Glidewell agreed.

Society of Chemistry provides a counselling service for its members who are faced with a career crisis. "When professional chemists lose their jobs", says Gerald King, the professional services officer at the RSC, they are, like everyone else, shattered by the experience and their confidence is undermined. There's no escaping that All of us go through it. What I can do is help them rebuild that confidence, reestablish them-selves and help them to see a way

Mr King usually sees about 110 people a year (out of a membership of 35,000) who need extensive personal help in dealing with career problems. This year he expects a 25 per cent increase. In a number of cases he has gone to see whole laboratories of gone to see whole isobratories of chemists who have been made redundant. All of them need a pep talk and to be given the same basic advice. The individual attention can

They bear that there are shortages so if they become unemployed they naturally see it as an alternative. But I really grill them over this. If they hadn't any previous interest in teaching and education I advise against it. Nothing could be worse than to go from the laboratory into teaching a class of uninterested youngsters who make your life miserable."

Through his close following of the unemployment market Mr King is able to give some shrewd advice about where the growth areas are and the employers who are recruiting. The RSC runs its own employment agency with a fairly sophisticated system of relating vacancies to the applicants on its books. Although precise figures are

John Muir looks at employees who have active roles outside work

It is widely accepted that management - here used in a general sense to cover management of community activities - should be broadly based. The idea is to bring in the citizen so that the man in the street, the customer, has a direct voice in the way these activities are managed, and thus, in theory, make the decisions more acceptable.

In a company which recognizes a union, the process of consultation and negotiation means that effectively the union has a hand in management. Such a process makes calls on time in working hours and the law provides for union representatives to be able to take reasonable time off for this and depending on the actual duties involved, time off with pay. This approach is parallel with arrangements when an employee needs time off for public duties, though he gets no

Many people who play an active role in public life either have time off during the day because of position or wealth, or are retired. The last word does not rest with the employer since the employee can complain to an industrial tribunal. A number of cases have been brought. A number of firms agree with their employees the number of days off for public duties. This has much to commend it in that it minimizes disputes, but even so the approach should be flexible. A general allo-cation does not necessarily meet the situation. It may well be that the boilerman requires more time off, and that his absence would have less impact than that of another employee.

Time off so granted does not carry with it the right to payment. Here is ground for the employer to consider. Does he encourage employees to take up public duties by ensuring no loss, does he merely do what the law requires, or does he use the accumulated absence as a stick against the employee by saying for example: "You have been away from the job and do not have the required

Terms for British rebate · From Isa Murray

New and very carefully thought out proposals, designed to give Britain back a net £500m of its 1982 EEC budget contributions, were presented yesterday to the European Parliament budgetary committee by Mr Christopher Tugendhat, the budget Commissioner. If accepted, they could mean greater control by the Community on exactly how

The proposals became necessary after the Euroean Parliament last month voted by a big majority to reject the supplementary budget needed to authorize Britain to receive back the money, even though the amount had aiready been approved the money is to be spent.

The proposals have been devised to try to meet the requirements laid down by Parliament last month for approving the rebate. Parliament's budgetary committee will study them in depth next

In the proposals the Commission's biggest gesture made to Parliament's demands is to stipulate that £28m of the money to be paid back to Britain should be spent on "energy strategy" which would be of all-round value in the EEC. This is aimed at satisfying Parliament's demand that rebate money should be earmarked for schemes of Community importance rather than being spent on projects which merely benefit Britain.

The Commission would also hang on to 10 per cent of all the rebate money until such time as it was satisfied that there had been "proper control" of the way it was being spent. The Commission clearly hopes to bring pressure on Britain to honour the understanding whereby a member state is meant to match Community money on any project with money from its own exchequer.

Mr Tugendhat's biggest eamble, however, is not actually spelt out in the proposals. It is the hope that Parliament will be prepared to accept the Commission's good will in putting forward the green discussion paper at the end of this month which will look-at the way the Community should be financed into the future. This is the best he can offer to meet Parliament's demand for no more "ad hoc" British budget deals

Inside the Lippitts Hill Camp at Loughton, Essex, once an anti-aircraft centre guarding north London and then a prisoner-of-war camp. the air reeks of burnt powder and the bucket beside the firearms instructor is filled with spent cartridges. On the floor of the range, which is like an elongated squash court, lie tiny lethal shards of lead which force the instructors to wear eye shields.

It is here that 4,500 officers from the metropolitan force of 26,000 men have been trained to kill if they are faced with no alternative.

In the four shooting ranges and beyond, in the classroom where Police Constable John Nunn, an instructor, is telling a class of eight . the staff. We want to find out what men and two women police constables how to accept the surrender of an armed man, it is business as usual.

After TV-am worldwide vision takes a bow

Mr Edward Heath last night made another of those weighty contributions of his to an economic debate.

The speech was an enjoy-able example of Late Heath, a able example of Late Heath, a more genial, almost chuckling, style than the artist's darker early and middle periods. But his calls for leadership always remain faintly manacing. This time he was in favour of what the called "A world wide vision." He noted with satisfaction that Sir Geoffrey Howe, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, had been made chairman of a body called the "interim committee" of the interim committee" of the International Monetary Fund. He welcomed this. He thought it indicated "world wide vision." fixing the amiable Sir Geoffrey with a sombre eye, he went on: "If there are some in the Treasury who don't

What was it, we all won-dered, this World Wide Vision? A picture was con-jured up of the well-mannered, refreshingly gentle Sir Geof-frey checking up on his civil servants in the manner sug-gested by Mr Heath. "Er, excuse men, Armature, I hope you don't mind me asking, but have you got a World Wide

"Well, actually, Chancellor, if you're thinking of buying a video, Fiona, and I swear by our Sony. World Wide Vision may be OK, but they do sound British. On the other hand, it could be the name a Jap firm uses for our market, in which case you're all right."

Mr Heath was listened to with great respect by the Labour, Liberal and SDP benches, since it is always assumed that anything he says in the House is bad for the Government. Mr Roy Jenkins, who spoke next, said it would come as no surprise to the House that he agreed with a number of points made by Mr Heath. In fact, Mr Heath made trouble for the Government only once, which was possibly a record. Otherwise the speech was all about Special Drawing Rights, isterim committees, the European Monetary System, Saudi Arabians and similar matters which are rightly of no concern to normal people, but mention of which are invariably intended to impress those who feel they should take an interest in public

The passage in which he made trouble for the Govern-ment came when he touched on the various ministeria claims that the pound fell partly or wholly as a result of the piedge by the Labour economic spokesman, Mr Peter Shore, that a Labour Government would allow it to depreciate. This, said Mr Heath, assuming a pose of amused disdain, was to attribute to Mr Shore and the ence in the world enonomy which was disproportionate.

Mr. Shore nodded agreement, though one could not entirely see why, since the implication of the passage was that Mr Heath thought Mr Shore a nobody Nonetheless. Mr Shore had spent a large the Treasury who don't earlier in the day in denying have a world wide vision I hope he will get rid of them as fall. He therefore welcomed soon as possible." measure of his own speech Conservative Prime Minister. however insulting. Mr Heath placed one more, small barb. Blaming the pound's fail on the policy of some Labour Government, showed "a lack of confidence in the outcome of the election" he dryly observed. Then, with or without irony, he quickly added that this was "not a lack of confidence I share".

Mr Heath's speech was the most diverting contribution to a rather ordinary debate. Mr Shore did a routine rage. The admirable Sir Geoffrey, like a reassuring announcement in an aeroplane, auributed the pound's recent difficulties to "turbulence." Mr Roy Jenkins expressed concern.

Members were far more interested in the earlier attraction of Mr Ronald Brown, the Social Democrat member for Hackney South moving to arraign Mr Kenneth Livings tone before the Committee of Privileges for allegedly threat-ening the constituencies of London MPs with cuts in services unless the MPs voted in the House as the GLC med. Wise Mr John Biffen. the Leader of the House, was by implication in favour of letting the matter rest after the Speaker-read out a letter from Mr Livingstone denying the offence. But enough Tories, Liberals and Social Democrats were on hand to vote that the Committee examine this case involving in an election year.
